WHEEL HUB BEARING UNIT

The wheel hub bearing unit is a key component in the automobile chassis system. Its basic structure usually includes bearings, seals, hubs, sensors and other parts. It integrates multiple functional components to support wheel rotation, transfer vehicle loads, and provide necessary sensor information.

Basic Structure

Compared with wheel bearing (press-fit bearings), wheel hub bearing unit (bolt-type bearings) integrate flange hubs and ABS sensors based on wheel bearings.

Bearing: The bearing is the core part of the wheel hub bearing unit and mainly plays the role of support and rotation. The bearing types commonly used in wheel bearing units are deep groove ball bearings and angular contact ball bearings. These types of bearings have high load-bearing capacity and good rotation accuracy. They are suitable for the installation and rotation requirements of automobile wheel hubs.

Seals: Seals are an indispensable part of the wheel hub bearing unit. They are mainly used to prevent dust, water and other impurities from entering the inside of the bearing and thus affecting its normal operation. Sealing performance, durability and temperature adaptability need to be considered when designing seals.

Hub: The hub is another important component of the hub bearing unit, connected to the outer ring of the bearing and directly connected to the wheel. The design of the wheel hub needs to take into account strength, lightweight and heat dissipation performance, while also being easy to install and remove.

Sensor: Sensor is a common component in modern wheel hub bearing units, mainly used to monitor the working status and temperature of the bearing. Through the sensor, the working parameters of the bearing can be obtained in real time, providing a basis for fault warning and maintenance.

SECOND GENERATION WHEEL HUB BEARING UNIT

The second-generation bearings are based on the first-generation bearings and integrate a flange hub, and have developed two main styles, the outer ring rotating type and the inner ring rotating type.

Outer ring rotating type

The outer ring rotation type uses the outer ring as the center of rotation. The outer ring of the outer ring rotary bearing is fixed on the wheel, and the rotation of the bearing is realized by the rotation of the wheel. This design makes the force on the bearing more uniform, reduces internal friction and wear, and increases the service life of the bearing.

Inner ring rotating type

The inner ring rotation type takes the inner ring as the center of rotation. The inner ring of the rotating inner ring is fixed on the axle, and the axle is connected to the wheel structure so that the entire hub bearing unit can rotate with the wheel. This design reduces the internal friction and wear of the bearing, improving the service life and reliability of the bearing.

The design of the second generation wheel hub bearing unit focuses on improving load capacity to adapt to different types of vehicles and driving conditions. In order to cope with road irregularities and impacts, second-generation wheel hub bearing units usually have better impact resistance to ensure the reliability of the vehicle suspension system.

THIRD GENERATION WHEEL HUB BEARING UNIT

The third generation bearings integrate ABS sensors on the basis of the second generation bearings. Based on this, two styles of ABS built-in and ABS external have been developed.

The third-generation wheel hub bearing unit adopts a more integrated design, integrating components such as sensors, bearings and bearing brackets to achieve a more compact structure. The inner ring of the third-generation bearing is integrated with the hub, and the outer ring is integrated with the flange connecting the steering knuckle, which can be connected to the steering knuckle through bolts. Assembly accuracy is greatly improved. And since all dimensions are precisely controlled at the supplier, performance is the best.

Third-generation wheel hub bearing units are usually equipped with advanced sensor technology, which can monitor wheel movement, vehicle speed, vehicle status and other information in real time, providing more precise suspension control for the vehicle. In response to the higher performance requirements of modern vehicles, third-generation wheel hub bearing units generally have stronger load capacity and longer service life.
